課程簡介

2020 was a year of challenges to emergency physicians because of the emergence of COVID 19. Besides the increased demand of suspected patient attended the department for screening, emergency physicians were also involved in the support for the management of the confirmed COVID 19 patients in the health care system. In the community level, COVID has halted the city in various aspects including, commercial and educational aspects. Similarly, the training for emergency physicians was also not significantly affected. All the training activities, namely joint clinical meeting and toxicology round could not be conducted as usual because of the advocacy of social distancing and the limitation to arrange non-clinical activities within hospital premises. Professional examination was also not exempted from the impact.

In this presentation, I will brief the contemporary challenges that we are facing for emergency physician training in Hong Kong and the potential solution to tackle the problems.
